RECREATION

Visitors to San Diego have a dazzling array of choices to make. Between the natural beauty of the beaches, parks, countless shopping and dining options, and a bustling nightlife, there's a world of possibilities. World renown sites such as the San Diego Zoo, rightfully known as the finest zoological collection in the world, the Wild Animal Park, LegoLand and Sea World offer just a few of the area attractions

Depending on your interests, you can sightsee, shop, stroll, see a movie, dine, or dance into the night. Your first stop should be Horton Plaza, a multi-story, open air mall known for its eclectic architecture, people-watching opportunities and more than 100 stores and shops. Explore the surrounding Gaslamp Quarter. Home to art galleries, boutiques, coffeehouses, neighborhood bars, swanky nightclubs and restaurants of every stripe, the Gaslamp Quarter offers something for every budget. Dining options range from family-style restaurants and chains to upscale steakhouses, Italian trattorias, tapas bars and Asian eateries. Several clubs and restaurants host live music (the House of Blues has a branch here) while others feature DJs, televised sports, or simply the buzz of lively conversations. Movie theaters include the Gaslamp Stadium 15 and the UA Horton Plaza; and if it's baseball season, you can catch a Padre game at the spectacular Petco Park.

The Horton Grand Hotel is a restoration of two separate hotels (The Grand Horton Hotel and the Brooklyn Kahle Saddlery Hotel) built at different locations and opened in 1886.

The Grand Horton was an elegant, ornate structure built by a German immigrant as a replica of the Innsbruck Inn in Vienna, Austria. Opened in 1886, the hotel was one of many constructed during the "Boom of the Eighties" to accommodate the influx of people. During 1886, some 26,000 visitors flocked to the little town of 5,000 during 1886, after the arrival of San Diego's first trans-continental train in 1885.

The Brooklyn-Kahle Saddlery Hotel, a less formal building with a Cowboy/Victorian flavor, sprang up at about the same time. Originally named the Brooklyn Hotel, it was later dubbed The Kahle Saddlery after the prominent saddle and harness shop that occupied the ground floor in 1912. Wyatt Earp lived in this hotel most of the seven years he resided in San Diego.

The 100-year-old oak Grand Staircase is from the original Grand Horton. The staircase was dismantled and shipped to Austria, where, at a cost of over $200,000, all damage was repaired to restore it to its former glory.

The Grand Horton and Brooklyn hotels were scheduled for demolition in the late 1970's and were purchased from the City of San Diego for $1.00 each. The redwood infrastructures were swapped for the labor needed to dismantle them brick by brick. Over 10,000 pieces were cataloged and stored in a warehouse until the rebuilt "Horton Grand Hotel" reopened at its present location in May, 1986.
